ALL OF BACH

<http://allofbach.com>

[I was alerted to this website by a news item in Organists' Review, so some of you will already have seen it, but I thought it sufficiently exciting and significant to bring to the attention of all members. The following information is taken from the website.]

In September 2013, the Netherlands Bach Society started performing and recording all of J S Bach's works. The first video recordings were made available on the above site on 2 May 2014, followed by a new Bach recording every Friday. Each piece of music by Bach has its own page, where site visitors can choose the recording, interviews, background information or audience reactions. Visitors can watch and listen to every single piece in its entirety, as well as the musicians talking about what the music does for them. Background information is provided and all the facts about the recording are compactly summarised. The public section of the site has space for reactions from visitors.

Why All of Bach?

Because the Netherlands Bach Society is looking forward to celebrating its first 100 years in the 2021-2022 season, the idea emerged to perform all of Bach's work. To stay close to Bach, the Society decided to perform his music in hand-picked locations: cantatas in a church, chamber music in living rooms, and so on. In order to reach as many people as possible, they looked to the new media. "In this way we can involve people in the way we work and let them discover how you can make Bach sound. It's a gift to the world. Because whether you live in South Korea and are practising the Minuet in G minor for the first time or you live in Appingedam and are fascinated by four-part fugues, you are just a few mouse clicks away from the information you are looking for", says the Society's artistic director, Jos van Veldhoven.

Netherlands Bach Society

The Netherlands Bach Society has figured prominently in Dutch cultural life for many years. It started out in 1921 with a plan for a performance of Bach's St Matthew Passion in the Grote Kerk in Naarden. Its founders purposely chose a church as a pendant to Willem Mengelberg's performances in the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam. The ensemble grew into a leading musical society with a flexible basis. It still performs the St Matthew Passion every year in the Grote Kerk in Naarden. In addition, each season it gives around fifty concerts all over the Netherlands as well as abroad. Jos van Veldhoven has been the artistic director since 1983.
